

As a brand new author, I was admittedly quite overwhelmed not only by the nuances of the publishing world but even more so by the marketing required for a new book title by a previously unpublished, although known, writer.

And then ASCOT Media came into the picture.

Trish Stevens and her team has embraced my project and made it as important as if it were their own. And my scheduler, Monica Foster, has dedicated her self to the success of the message of The Santa Letters with a passion equal to my own.

Their offices are out of Nassau Bay, Texas and it was interesting for me to note that not even a natural disaster like hurricane Ike could deter their efforts as they got back to work as soon as they could and rallied behind me. It was humbling to hear their cheerful voices void of complaints as they rose above the chaos that surrounded them and got to work not wanting to disappoint me.

I have not only been blessed with a super publicity group but with friends who embrace my passion and do everything they can to help me share my vision. If you want a publicity company that will not only put their best foot forward but will stand behind you 150%, go to ASCOT Media.
